The GPSC is working toward creating an integrated system of care that enables access to quality primary health care that effectively meets the needs of patients and populations in BC.

GPs have told us that they need help with:

- Dealing with the administrative burden.
- Dealing with caring for complex patients.
- Maximizing a team.

The health system is under strain on a number of fronts:

- GPs are under stress and the threat of burnout is real.
- Many patients can't find a family doctor.
- The system is difficult to navigate for patients and doctors.
- Given the strains, change is inevitable.

The GPSC is ensuring that family physicians remain central decision makers throughout the process in how the system supports their ideal practices, and divisions of family practice play a key role in shaping primary care in their communities.
